Tustin

The town of Tustin is located three miles east of Santa Ana. The business center is small, but is surrounded by a thickly settled and highly improved country. The population is about 800. The town has a bank, store and other business facilities. It is the terminus of the Tustin branch of the S. F. R. R., which has good depot buildings and has recently built a large packing house. Aliso station on the main line of the S. F. R. R. is but a mile distant. The public school is one of the best in the county, having ample accommodations and employing a principal and five teachers for the more than 200 pupils. There are three church organizations each owning its edifice. The domestic water system has been greatly improved recently, and affords an ample supply of pure artesian water piped under pressure. The irrigation system is the same that supplies Santa Ana and Orange. The streets and roads are excellent and some sixteen miles are watered during summer. The appearance of the orchards and avenue trees attest the fertility of soil and sufficient water supply. The leading productions are oranges, walnut apricots, olives, lemons and other fruits, with grain, hay, alfalfa and all vegetables and flowers in profusion.
